A mentor, a professional, and a friend. Traits every Flight Instructor should be able to offer to their students. It wasn't long ago when I was attempting to fulfill my passion of learning to fly. As far back as I could remember, I always dreamed of flying airplanes. It wasn't until my 30th birthday I determined that now was the time to fly. I had no idea that once my training had started that my passion would be fueled and upon receiving my Private Pilot's Certificate I would continue to learn and strive to become a better flyer.

I can't help to think that one of the reasons I continued to train and better my own abilities was due to the inspiration and guidance I received from my flight instructor. His own dedication and professionalism has inspired me to uphold the values, experience, education, and traditions in the aviation community.

I promise to provide my students with a comfortable learning environment with the same dedication and professionalism I expected when I started. Learning and safety are my commitment. I believe that flight training is serious work and must be made fun for an enjoyable life experience. There is nothing more rewarding in life than being able to help someone accomplish their goals, achieve their dreams and inspire a future generation of pilots.
